Aguirre Headed For Career On Wall Street

In case you missed it, Mike Aguirre called a press conference yesterday to announce he would like to talk to the Chargers. Here is a link to the Daily Transcript story if you are interested in reading about it.

Obviously Mr. Aguirre doesn't have the Chargers' phone number, or he would have just called. So, here it is Mike: The San Diego Chargers - 858-874-4500. Hope that helps. As taxpayers, we should be really pleased to know that the City doesn't have a clue how much it costs to run QUALCOMM Stadium. But, now that Aguirre has finally figured it out (whew), the answer is to call a press conference to say that the contract with the Charges is wrong, so they would like to have the Chargers change it.

That makes sense, of course. And since we are $1.4 billion dollars short on pension funding, let's call all the businesses in San Diego and identify that the City got that part wrong also, so, we all need to ante up a little more. And, while we're at it, they kind of missed the boat on water and sewer requirements, so perhaps we could go house-to-house using the old "pass the hat" routine. Still not sure what we do to cover unfunded healthcare or infrastructure issues, but we are going into uncharted territory in municipal management with this approach.

Obviously this explains why Mr. Aguirre has lost so many legal cases since being elected - - he is preoccupied with bold, new financial strategies (unknown to any marketplace on earth) that have him distracted.
